

Safety and Hospital Information for LBA-ECO Sites in Brazil

General Information about Health Care Facilities

The objective of this manual is to inform you of who to contact and where to go in the case of emergencies or health care problems while doing fieldwork for LBA-ECO in Brazil. It is important to review this material, as it will expedite your treatment in the case of emergencies. After reading this manual, you should identify the hospital nearest to your field site and speak with the logistics aide in that area to understand what emergency equipment is available (e.g., backboards, first aid kits, satellite phones, anti-venom, etc.). You should also ask the logistics aide to point out any important information about dangers specific to your field site (e.g., snake identification, tower training, 4x4 training, etc.). In case of any emergencies or health problems, you should immediately contact the local office or logistics aide where you are in Brazil. They can assist you with finding an appropriate hospital and help facilitate logistical difficulties you may encounter. Below is a list of who to contact at the major LBA-ECO Sites in Brazil.

The Brazilian hospital system is a network of private and public hospitals. The public hospitals are funded by the Brazilian government and do not require payment of services from the patients. The public hospitals are usually the only hospitals that have anti-venom for poisonous snakes and other venomous animal bites. The Secretary of Health for each state furnishes anti-venom for public hospitals first. Since the supply is limited, they often cannot furnish anti-venom for private hospitals.

In remote locations, such as Santarém or Ji-Paraná, public hospitals (often referred to as municipal hospitals) generally have better emergency treatment than private hospitals. Since public hospitals are free and usually better equipped to handle emergencies these public hospitals can often be overcrowded. A rule of thumb is to go to the public hospitals for emergencies and private hospitals for ambulatory (“walk-in”) injuries. A fee may be charged at private hospitals, but the wait to be treated will likely be shorter. If you have to be in a public hospital for any length of time, you may want to be transferred to a private hospital once your injury has been stabilized, since accommodations are often better (e.g., rooms with air conditioning).

The quality of hospitals varies greatly from small town to large city. For example, you will find very well equipped and modern hospitals in Brasília, staffed with most types of medical specialists. The hospitals in Belém and Manaus are better equipped than those in smaller cities. In Santarém and Ji-Paraná, the medical facilities are poorer. For example, in Santarém there is only one hospital with an emergency room and no reliable ambulance system. The physicians at smaller hospitals are usually well trained, but due to funding constraints, these able doctors are not always able to provide the treatment they are trained to give due to the lack of proper equipment. In addition, remote locations do not have refined evacuation systems to larger cities. Do not go to Santarém with expectations of being airlifted to Miami in case of an emergency. To be evacuated you may have to take a long ambulance ride to the capital city (e.g., if in Ji-Paraná) or reserve nine seats on the local airline to get to a larger city (e.g., if in Santarém). You might be interested in acquiring your own evacuation insurance.

There are some insurance companies in the U.S. guarantee evacuation to the U.S. in the case of emergencies.

The LBA-ECO Project Office is working to encourage safe operational practices and to develop emergency plans at each site. In addition to providing basic safety equipment, the Project Office has held courses in first aid, poisonous snake identification, 4x4 vehicle operation, and tower climbing/safety for local staff and scientists. The Project Office has also translated a first aid book that is available at the field sites in Portuguese and English. Additionally, a poisonous animal handbook is available on the website in Portuguese. The Project Office has also been involved in helping a Santarém hospital become better equipped to handle emergencies for the Science Team. If you would like to find out about any courses being held at your field site or have any questions about safety information, please contact the LBA ECO Field Operations Team lba-infrastructure@tapajos.gsfc.nasa.gov. Below you will see a list of contact persons at each site in case of an emergency. This list is followed by a description of hospitals at major field sites.

I. Santarém, Pará

For all emergencies, you should contact the Santarém office or coordinator immediately. The coordinator will notify the emergency room and physicians of your arrival. The Project Office has purchased a supply of anti-venom for Santarém and a supply of anti-venom will be delivered to the hospital if necessary. Please remember that if you have an emergency you will need to go to the Municipal Hospital of Santarém. If you have a less urgent, walk-in problem you can choose another hospital (See Santarém Hospital Map). Please contact the local logistics coordinator for further advice.

III. Brasília, D.F.

The Brasília network of health care consists of many hospitals and labs. Here is a list of several:

- Base Hospital for the Federal District (Hospital de Base do Distrito Federal)
- South Wing Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional da Asa Sul)
- North Wing Regional Hospital (Hospital da Asa Norte)
- Gama Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional de Gama)
- Taguatinga Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional de Taguatinga)
- Ceilândia Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional de Ceilândia)
- Brazlândia Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional de Brazlândia)
- Sobradinho Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional Sobradinho)
- Planaltina Regional Hospital (Hospital Regional Planaltina)
- São Vicente de Paulo Hospital and the Center of Health (Hospital São Vicente de Paulo e dos Centro de Saúde)
- Ceilândia Regional Laboratory (Laboratório Regional de Ceilândia)
- Guará Regional Laboratory (Laboratório Regional do Guará)
- Taguatinga Radiology Center (Central de Radiologia de Taguatinga)
- Mental Health Institute (Instituto de Saúde Mental)

There are three main public hospitals, including, Base Hospital, North Wing Regional Hospital, and University of Brasília Hospital. In the north and south sectors of the wings there are hospital sectors.

Please recall that the city of Brasília is in the shape of an airplane; that is what “wings” mean. The hospitals in the north and south sectors are mainly private hospitals. In every satellite city around Brasília (e.g., Planaltina) there is a regional hospital. The satellite hospitals normally receive patients, make an evaluation, and if necessary, the patient is transported to the Base Hospital or the North Wing Regional Hospital.

For the two main field sites in Brasília (IBGE and Águas Emendadas) there are two recommended hospitals nearby. For IBGE it is best to drive to the Base Hospital (some private hospitals are closer, but do not offer the best emergency treatment). For Águas Emendadas, the Planaltina Regional Hospital is the closest. Patients can be transported to one of the larger hospitals in the city if necessary. The fire department can also be contacted to transport the patient from the location of the accident to the hospital. In this case, the accompanying physician in the mobile ICU decides which hospital the patient should be taken to.

In general, all of the health services in the Federal District are of good quality. Sometimes there are problems with a high volume of patients at the hospitals because these hospitals attend to all the cities that are in a 500 km radius of Brasília.
